june 2018 Volume XLV, Number 12

Recently Sinclair Broadcasting Group, the nation's largest owner of television stations, had its local news station anchors recite the same script on-air. This move is not unusual from Sinclair, as it often requires all its stations to play video segments known as "must-runs." With stations all across the country, Sinclair's requisite stories take away the opportunity for those local journalists to explore the real needs and news in their communities.

This is just another reason why public media like ours is so important. Our funding comes from the community; therefore, the community is the inspiration for our journalism. Through our various news and engagement departments, our goal at IPM is to work with the people across our state to find the stories that really matter, speak to the needs and issues our communities face, and provoke change in our daily lives.

It is these values that remain at our core. Our journalistic integrity cannot be bought. But to persevere on that path, we need you to double-down on your financial support. Help us complete our fiscal year budget so we can continue our award-winning reporting as we share the stories that matter to central Illinois.

Filmmaker returns home to explore past

What do you do when burying the past isn't easy anymore?

After 44 years of virtual silence, film director Paul Sheriff returns to the heartland of America and confronts his childhood in this compelling and inspirational documentary.

My Sister Hali, airing at 7 pm Tuesday, June 5, is a historical chronicle of the Blue Mound Gymnastics Club formed in the early 1960s in Blue Mound, Illinois. The backbone of the film is the exceptional gymnastic career of a physical genius named Hali, and the dynamic driving force of her mother and gymnastics coach, Ginny Sheriff. At the age of 14, before Hali could be recognized as one of the best female gymnasts in the world, her life was cut short. While returning from a gymnastics exhibition in Cedar Rapids, Iowa in 1966, Hali and Ginny were killed in a tragic plane crash. Also killed was Hali's father, the Reverend Harold Sheriff, who was piloting the plane, as well as family friends, Nancy Beckett, Billy Beckett, and Nancy Beckett's niece, Joanna Wulfsberg. At the time, Hali's brother Paul Sheriff, the director of My Sister Hali, was just ten years old.

Juxtaposed with this story is a secondary theme that addresses how the director perceived his past over the last 45 years. Through video diary, archival footage, and location interviews, the film explores the effects and influences of this traumatic event in Sheriff's life and the lives of the immediate surviving members of his family, teammates, and friends. Within this framework, the film critically examines loss and the changing roles and relationships within the family unit. My Sister Hali also addresses athletic competition as a philosophy of life, with its effects on the individual athlete.

Interviews are juxtaposed with vintage images, gathered historical text, and metaphorical images that conjure past emotions and allow the viewer to become a part of Paul's journey. The intent of the film is to find some commonality shared by us all when addressing the past and honoring its inescapable presence in our daily lives.

I am truly grateful for Dianne Noland who was instrumental in contacting WILL to air my documentary, My Sister Hali.

Hali began her amazing journey at the Palaestrum in Champaign-Urbana, under the supervision of legendary gymnastics coach Charlie Pond in the late 1950s.

Now, 60 years later, she again will capture our hearts as we share her incredible story.

IPM staff win multiple awards

The Illinois Associated Press honored Illinois Public Media with 3 awards. The ceremony was held in East Peoria on Saturday, April 21, as part of the Illinois News Broadcasters Association convention. Scott Cameron, executive editor of Illinois Newsroom, said, “IPM’s journalists continue to raise the bar on community-focused journalism that offers depth, context and meaningful resources to the audiences we serve. These awards honor the creativity, commitment and passion of our news team.”

Christine Herman won second place in the Hard News Feature category for her story “Medicaid Bill Backlog Pushing Illinois Doctors to The Brink of Closure.” Herman, a reporter for Illinois Public Media, investigated the story after learning that the 2-year budget impasse made it difficult for children on Medicaid to get access to medical care. “I reached out to pediatricians who were saddled with hundreds of thousands of dollars in debt, including one who decided to leave the state. It’s easy to get bogged down in all the numbers—736 days without a budget, $3 billion medical bill backlog—and I wanted to shine a light on the human impact of Illinois lawmakers’ inability to pass a budget.”

Brian Moline won second place in the Best Series or Documentary category for his piece “St. Joseph Woman Shares Story of Opioid Addiction.” Moline, the managing editor of IPM’s news and public affairs department, as well as the host of Morning Edition on WILL-AM 580 and FM-90.9, said, “I would like to thank Jaime Smith for allowing me to tell her story of addiction and recovery. It’s a powerful reminder that the opioid epidemic has touched people in our community from all walks of life. I’d also like to extend a special thank you to everyone at the Prairie Center (now Rosecrance) for getting me in touch with Jaime, and for allowing me to talk to them about their treatment process and the increasing need for additional beds.”

Kimberlie Kranich won first place in the Best Series or Documentary category for her radio documentary “Still Here: Vietnam War Stories from Illinois,” created with Chicago-based co-producer John Fecile. “It’s incredibly satisfying to be able to work at Illinois Public Media and create stories that are inspired by community needs. I am a public servant and am always thinking about how my work can be of use to the different communities WILL serves,” said Kranich, director of community content and engagement at Illinois Public Media. “I’m proud that this documentary could bring very different personal accounts of the war to the table. For this documentary to have won this award is just icing on the cake.”

Documentary wins esteemed journalism award

For the first time in several years, IPM was honored with a Regional Murrow Award. Kimberlie Kranich and John Fecile’s Vietnam War documentary, “Still Here: Vietnam War Stories from Illinois” won in the documentary category.

The Murrows, facilitated by the Radio Television Digital News Association, are among the most prestigious and celebrated awards for broadcast and online journalism. This first-place prize automatically nominates the documentary for a national Murrow award, held in June.

In response to the win, Kranich said, “Being an Edward R. Murrow Award Winner is an honor and a testament to grounding WILL’s work in community needs. Our documentary, “Still Here: Vietnam War Stories from Illinois” is the fourth part of a four-year effort. When Ken Burns and Lynn Novick announced that their groundbreaking series, The Vietnam War, would air in 2017, WILL started to reach out to veterans, war resisters, and refugees living in central Illinois to preserve their oral histories. We involved students from Stretch Ledford’s MultiMedia Reporting Class at Illinois in this process. That was part one. Part two was hiring Mark Foley, Urbana High School social studies teacher, to turn those oral histories into media-rich lesson plans for high school teachers and distribute them for free on PBSLearningMedia.org. Part three was to hire my co-producer, John Fecile, to take a small subset of these oral histories and turn them into a comprehensive and compelling story about the harsh realities of war as well as journeys of survival and recovery. And part four was to host screenings at the Abraham Lincoln Presidential Library and Museum of these local stories with the public at interactive sessions. Each part contributes to a much larger whole.

I am grateful that our contributors trusted us to tell and share their stories with the public.”

BTS returns with a classical twist

There's more to classical than meets the ear.

Classical: BTS is a six-part webseries devoted to revealing the lesser-seen—and heard—stories about classical music in central Illinois. In these mini-documentaries, you'll see hard work, performance, and creativity brought to life; you'll also hear how six unique individuals found their way to classical music, and how they continue to blaze new trails with their work.

Lisa Bralts, director of content and strategic communications, worked with IPM's producer/director Isaac Musgrave to create the series, a spin-off of the highly successful webseries ART/BTS.

"We have a pretty popular classical music service here at WILL on the FM side, and a very appreciative audience," said Bralts, "and I thought it would be interesting as ART/BTS was happening to pull out certain types of stories from the arts."

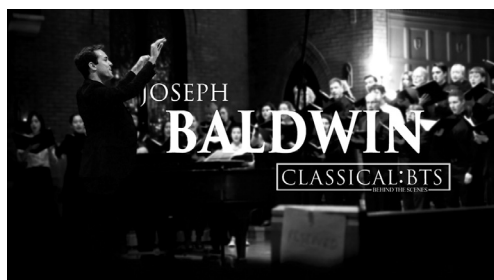

The entire series can be viewed at will.illinois.edu/classicalbts.

University of Illinois professor Stephen Taylor can trace everything back to hearing Stravinsky for the first time.

Sam Walder felt the difficulty and stress sometimes associated with learning the violin firsthand.

Conductor Joseph Baldwin has worked with orchestras, choirs, and many individuals as a teacher on his path to conducting. He's also a yogi.

Pianist and composer Dr. Charles Joseph Smith was diagnosed with autism at the age of four.

Music has always been an integral part of harpist/composer/teacher Julia Kay Jamieson's life.

Champaign-based Stephen Schmidt transferred his passion for playing music into a career restoring pianos.

IPM stories shared nationally

Lee Gaines, reporter for Illinois Newsroom, and Christine Herman, reporter for Illinois Public Media, recently had their local stories shared nationally on NPR's Here & Now.

Lee Gaines
Potential Pitfalls of Poverty Simulations

“I covered a poverty simulation used for professional development training to help teachers and support staff better grasp the realities faced by children and families surviving on low incomes. I left with a lot of questions. I then found research that suggested these simulations could potentially reinforce negative stereotypes about people living in poverty. I also found a woman who facilitated and participated in the simulation in Springfield schools who could speak to the value of the simulation (it helped her contextualize her own experience living in poverty) and the pitfalls (she told me she saw the false assumptions of other educators who had never experienced the real thing reinforced).”

Christine Herman
How to Treat Chronic Pain without Opioids

“The idea for this story originated from an email I received last year from a listener after I produced a week-long series on the opioid crisis in Illinois for The 21st show. The email was from a psychologist at a pain clinic in Peoria, who wanted to draw my attention to the fact that the way we treat chronic pain with opioids is all wrong. I did some digging, reached out to national pain experts and learned that, in fact, the research shows the best treatment for chronic pain is not a drug, but rather hands-on approach that incorporates physical and psychological therapies with lifestyle changes. But there are many challenges and barriers when it comes to accessing this kind of treatment.”

Roger Blanco is Illinois Public Media's latest intern

Roger Blanco joined the IPM team as the latest intern for the Spring 2018 semester. Blanco, a junior at the U of I, majors in broadcast journalism. He spent his internship working with Lisa Bralts on The Bandwagon, IPM's sports podcast.

Sports broadcasting was a perfect fit for Blanco, a lifelong sports enthusiast. "I enjoy watching and playing sports (baseball, football, and basketball), but I would say I follow baseball more, more importantly, the Chicago White Sox. I've played baseball for my entire life, and I have been a Sox fan since day one." It's this joy for sports that led Blanco, a Cicero, Ill., native, to broadcast journalism. "It has been something I've been wanting to do since I was a child. Every morning, I would watch Sportscenter to get my sports news, tune into Mike and Mike in the morning during my car rides to high school, and would always watch anything on the ESPN."

Blanco has had multiple inspirations on his path to college, including the late American sportscaster Stuart Scott. "Stuart Scott has been someone that will stick out to me as I pursue my career in Journalism.

He had the fire, energy, and the passion for what he does." But Blanco's great inspirations are his mom and grandma. "My family is the most important thing to me. My grandma and my mom came to the United States from Mexico when my mom was little and without their bravery, I wouldn't be in the position that I am in today. My mom and my grandma are the two strongest women I know, and they risked everything just to give everyone in our family a better future. I hope I can provide for them as well as make them proud of me in the future."

Thank you for your work this semester, Roger!
